

The loop, and the one edge that varies

The three-way decoupling that makes the comparison identify

Three different quantities, measured on three windows that do not overlap. The quantity shown to the designer is not the quantity candidates are selected on, and neither is the quantity the hypothesis is tested on, so an apparent effect cannot be an artefact of a measure grading itself.

Five conditions run this loop. Everything outside the doubled box is byte-identical across all five.